The wife of a skilled artisan named Schmid, of Samara, Russia, gave birth to a child while her husband, who had spent all his wages for many previous weeks in liquor, was away from his home upon a drunken frolic. Two days after her confinement Schmid staggered in, and began to shout, with horrible threats and curses, for his dinner. There having been neither food nor money in the house since he had last left it, the unfortunate woman had had no nourishment for herself or her babe since its birth, and the latter had died of exhaustion but a few minutes before its father made his appearance. To Schmid's brutal menaces his miserable wife made no answer. She rose from her pallet, wan and emaciated, crept across the room to the dreaser, took thence a large dish, which she carried back to the bed, and, placing the baby's corpse upon the dish, set it down on the table before her husband, with the simple but awful words: "There is nothing else to eat in the house!" Schmid sat gazing with a glassy stare at his dead child for some time. Presently a neighbor came in and spoke to him, but he uttered no word and made no sign. Upon closer examination he was found to have entirely lost his reason, and he was conveyed to a madhouse, where he still remains a hopeless lunatic.
